

Rebuilding America One Neighborhood, One City at a Time: The City in the Twenty-First Century

By Henry Cisneros

In Rebuilding America One Neighborhood, One City at a Time, former HUD Secretary Henry Cisneros argues that the future of America depends on the revitalization of our cities. He draws on his own experiences as mayor of San Antonio and as HUD Secretary to provide a blueprint for how we can create more livable, sustainable, and equitable communities.

Cisneros begins by laying out the challenges facing our cities today. These challenges include:

- Declining populations and tax bases

- Rising poverty and inequality
- Suburban sprawl and environmental degradation
- A lack of affordable housing
- Crime and violence

Cisneros argues that these challenges are not inevitable. He believes that we can overcome them by investing in our cities and creating more livable, sustainable, and equitable communities.

Cisneros offers a number of specific recommendations for how we can rebuild our cities. These recommendations include:

- Investing in affordable housing
- Creating more jobs and economic opportunities
- Improving public transportation
- Making our cities more walkable and bikeable
- Protecting our environment
- Investing in education and job training
- Creating more opportunities for civic engagement

Cisneros believes that by investing in our cities, we can create a more just and equitable society for all Americans.
