Dea Loher's acclaimed play, Rwandese Child Soldier, tells the harrowing and hopeful story of a young girl caught in the Rwandan genocide. This powerful and moving work explores the resilience of the human spirit and the devastating impact of war on children.

The play is set in Rwanda in 1994, during the Rwandan genocide. The genocide was a systematic and intentional killing of Tutsi people by Hutu people. Over 800,000 people were killed in the genocide, including an estimated 250,000 children.

The play follows the story of a young Tutsi girl named Nyamata. Nyamata is forced to flee her home when the genocide begins. She is separated from her family and friends, and she witnesses the horrors of the genocide firsthand.

Despite the horrors she has witnessed, Nyamata never gives up hope. She finds strength in her friends and family, and she eventually finds a way to escape the genocide. The play ends with Nyamata reunited with her family and friends, and she is hopeful for the future.

The Rwandan Genocide

The Rwandan genocide was a systematic and intentional killing of Tutsi people by Hutu people. The genocide began on April 6, 1994, after the assassination of Rwandan President Juvénal Habyarimana. The genocide was carried out by Hutu militias and government forces, and it lasted for 100 days.

Over 800,000 people were killed in the genocide, including an estimated 250,000 children. The genocide was one of the most horrific events in recent history, and it had a devastating impact on Rwanda.

The Impact of War on Children

War has a devastating impact on children. Children who are exposed to war are more likely to experience physical, emotional, and psychological problems. They are also more likely to be killed, injured, or orphaned.

The Rwandan genocide was a particularly horrific example of the impact of war on children. Over 250,000 children were killed in the genocide, and many more were orphaned or injured.

Children who survived the genocide are often left with physical, emotional, and psychological scars. They may have difficulty sleeping, eating, or concentrating. They may also experience nightmares, flashbacks, and anxiety.

It is important to remember that children who have been exposed to war need our help. We can provide them with physical, emotional, and psychological support. We can also help them to rebuild their lives and to create a better future for themselves.

Rwandese Child Soldier is a powerful and moving play that tells the harrowing and hopeful story of a young girl caught in the Rwandan genocide. The play is a testament to the resilience of the human spirit and the devastating impact of war on children.

We must never forget the Rwandan genocide, and we must continue to work to prevent future genocides. We must also continue to support children who have been affected by war.

By helping children who have been affected by war, we can help them to heal and to rebuild their lives. We can also help to create a better future for them and for all of us.
